

Your ESG assessments in the safest possible hands

Realising and upholding your Environmental, Social and Governance (ESG) obligations is critical to the long-term future of your business.

Increasingly, businesses operating in a growing number of manufacturing and processing sectors worldwide - including pulp and paper - are being required (by stock markets and various legislative bodies) to provide full ESG disclosures, as part of their quarterly and annual reporting procedures.

An ESG rating is generated by a range of different platforms. These include analysis of corporate disclosures, management interviews and reviews of relevant business information and data existing in the public domain. It helps bridge the gap between a company's official disclosures and the general public's perceptions of its behaviours regarding ESG.

Report frameworks have been developed and made available, to help you present this information in a clear, standardised format, including the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI), Principles for Responsible Investment

(PRI) and the Sustainability Accounting Standards Board (SASB).
